Activity Description:

If your child or group is not yet familiar with the five senses, describe and discuss them before this activity. This discussion can include information about the body parts that are responsible for each sense, what the children are observing with their senses in their current location, and a list of other examples for each sense.

Next, have the group apply this knowledge by observing lemon(s) with their senses. They can do this when the lemon is whole, cut in half, juiced, peeled, zested, frozen, heated, and so on.

The group can optionally record their observations as they go along.
